2. Overview and Introduction to the Templates

2.1. Overview

The templates in this document are intended to be used for printing photographs using the UPnP PrintEnhanced:1 [PE1] print service. These templates are written to be used in a cut-and-paste fashion so that a printing control point implementer can take them as is, insert the appropriate URIs for the photos, select the correct orientation for the photos and have successful results across a wide range of UPnP Printers. In addition, the set of templates included in this document taken as a set represent a reasonable set of templates for a complete photo printing user experience.

Readers of the “XHTML-Print Photo Templates for UPnP PrintEnhanced:1” are assumed to be a control point (CP) implementer. The Templates can be used in a cut-and-paste fashion so that users may use their final printed output in two ways:

- 1) A simple album page that is saved in a notebook or displayed as printed
- 2) Photo(s) can be cut out and be placed in a frame or a traditional photo album

The diagram (Figure 1) below depicts a CP consuming the image data to produce the XHTML-Print/CSSP document to print. In this process, the application software/firmware at the CP is supposed to examine the dimensions of the image data (rather than EXIF tag) to determine the appropriate orientation for its Style Sheet. Please note that the EXIF rotation tag is not a reliable indicator and should not be used for determining image orientation.

the orientation of each image. The CSS3 orientation mechanism enables image rotation to align images in the desired orientation.

2.3. Image Rotation Considerations

The majority of photos are taken in landscape mode (width > height). The templates included in this document are designed to optimize the viewing of landscape photos. However, it is not uncommon for photos to be stored in Portrait mode (Height > Width). Many digital cameras either orient the photo automatically or allow the user to orient the photo. However, frequently photos are taken in Portrait mode but not rotated until viewed on a larger device. A further complication is that portrait photos are taken by rotating the camera clockwise 90deg and also rotating it counterclockwise by 90deg. As a result, photos may be stored in any orientation and the UPnP control point needs to set the orientation correctly before it sends it to the template. The templates include CSS elements for all of the possible orientations but they need to be purposely selected when building the XHTML-Print file.

Please Note: Image rotation should be specified using CSS3 [CSS3_PM] rotation mechanisms. Do not rely on the EXIF App markers to rotate images. Also, it is important to note how portrait photos are rotated. It is recommended that photos are rotated counterclockwise 90deg (actually 270deg) so that if the page is placed in a binder the viewing orientation is more natural.

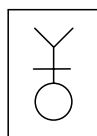

Photos from a Digital camera may be stored in any of the forms shown in Figure 5.

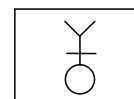

Landscape
(Most Common)
Use 0deg rotation

Portrait
(Common)
Use 270 deg rotation

Reverse Portrait
(Common)
Use 90 deg Rotation

Reverse Landscape
(Rare)

Figure 5

Generally, after a user has viewed and properly rotated the photos they will appear in either of the two forms shown in Figure 6. Many cameras include an orientation sensor that will also produce photos in either of the two orientations. If the control point cannot determine the orientation of the content then it is still necessary to use the indicated rotation in Figure 6. This can be determined by looking at the dimensions of the data.

The programming model for all of cut-outs in the templates is Landscape. This is true even in the case where the cut-out might be portrait; e.g. full bleed letter size and the first two cut-outs on the 3-up template (Figure 7). If a source image has a portrait orientation it will need to be rotated even if the template looks like a portrait cut-out. Please refer to the comments for that template to understand how this is accomplished.

In order to use the templates the control point application will need to determine the orientation of the photo and add the proper information into the XHTML code to rotate the image. All portrait photos need to be rotated either 90 degrees or 270 degrees to align with the cut-outs shown in Figure 7.

An example XHTML code fragment for this is listed below. There are four pieces of information that need to be filled in by the Control Point application so that the photo is correctly printed. The image cut-out number, image file name (or URI), the aspect ratio of the image, and the rotation information.

1
```

- ☐ The image number, img1, is a CSS element that indicates the number of the cut-out on the page. If there are eight cut-outs in the template the value would range from img1 to img8.
- ☐ Include the image file name, e.g. imgfile.jpg.

- ❑ The aspect ratio and rotation are included in the same attribute value. In this case `img 34 270deg` indicates an aspect ratio of 3:4 and a rotation of 270 degrees. Please note that the EXIF tag header is not a reliable rotation mechanism so the control point application writer needs to look at the dimensions of the data to determine the orientation and then indicate the appropriate rotation. There are four orientations available in the templates: 0deg, 90deg, 180deg, and 270deg. Even in the case of 0deg the rotation needs to be indicated.

2.4. Photo Scaling and Cropping

The following tables (table 1-3) were used to calculate the cropping and scaling for 2:3, 3:4, and 9:16 images in order to fit them into the standard photo sizes listed. These values are easily calculated. The process is to first determine if the photo should be scaled to fit in the long axis or the short axis by doing a simple comparison of the aspect ratios. The image then has to be scaled isotropically and centered. Cropping is handled by the `overflow:hidden` attribute in the CSS `div` element for the cut-out. The following code sample can also be used to calculate the scaling and cropping values:

height, width of the image: h, w
height, width of the drawing area: H, W
if (h/w < H/W)
    align HEIGHT /* crop the image horizontally */
    xhtml height = H
    xhtml width = w*H/h
    margin-left = ("xhtml width"-W)/2
else
    align WIDTH
    xhtml height = h*W/w /* crop the image vertically */
    xhtml width = W
    margin-top = ("xhtml height"-H)/2
fi

2.5. Template List

The terms Landscape, Portrait, and Mixed refer to the orientation that a user would hold the paper in order to view the photos assuming all landscape photos. Mixed is a special case to optimize the number of photos on a page. The “Commonly Used” column in each table indicates a smaller subset for those photo printing applications that wish to minimize the number of templates they support.

2.5.1. US/Americas Photo/Paper Sizes

Letter Size (A) Paper (8 ½ x 11 in)		Image Size	Commonly Used

2.6. Template Structure

((TBD – This section needs to be reworked when templates are finalized.))

The basic structure of the XHTML-Print templates included in this document follow the same pattern.

Notes:

Line 6: Titles are not used by the printer but must be included to be a valid XHTML document.

Line 7: This line establishes the base URL reference for all of the image files. Please note that in many cases there may not be a DNS sever available so a numeric IP address should be used. The exception to this is if the content is on the Internet.

Lines 14,15: These establish the Page Div's for pagination control. The `page_last` element is required to prevent undesired blank pages.

Lines 17,18: These CSS elements establish the cut-outs for the photos.

Lines 21-34: These CSS elements establish the URL, scaling, cropping and rotation for each image. Please refer to section 2.4 for more information.

XHTML Section

31 <body>
32
33 <!-- Page 1-(n-1) -->
34
35
36
37
38
39 <!-- Page Last -->
40
41
42
43
44
45 </body>
46
47 </html>

```

Notes:

Lines 34-37: These lines establish the content for the first page. This is a 2-up template so each page will have 2 lines for referencing the line.

Lines 35,36: Please refer to section 2.3 for a more detailed description for how to fill in these lines. `yy` refers to the aspect ratio of the image, e.g. 34 for 3:4. `xxx` refers to the rotation needed, e.g. 270

Lines 40-44: Last page definition. If there are not enough images to fill the last page there is no problem omitting lines for images not needed.

4. Example Templates with Text

4.1. Adding Text

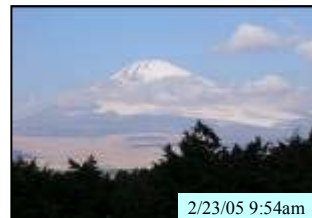

Adding text on album pages and photos is often desirable; e.g. dates, captions, and titles. Dates can be generated automatically using the date information in the EXIF header. Titles and captions may require the user to input textual information.

The following templates are included to illustrate several variations of how this might be done. Text placed inside a photo and text placed outside the photos are treated slightly different. For the case of ‘inside the photo’ the containing block for the photo defines the dimensions and origin for placing the text. This simplifies the CSS elements needed to define the attributes for the text: one definition can be applied to all of the photos on the page. In the case of text outside the photos, the location and attributes are defined for each string.

Figure 8

One other subtle detail is not having the text too close to the edge of the photos. Special attention was made in the templates to avoid having the characters touch the edge of the photo. In the case of Style 1, the placement was carefully selected to avoid the edges. In Style 2, you’ll notice the use of the style “white-space:pre;” and space characters around the date string to avoid getting too close to the edges.
